Highlights in Denver giving

Active grantmaking

Denver donors were actively engaged in philanthropy in 2018—recommending more than 15,000 grants to charity. The region averaged 13 grants per Giving Account® last year—25 percent higher than the national average of 10.4.

Diverse local support

More than $11 million in grants supported local organizations in 2018, representing nearly a third of total giving. The dollars that remained in the Denver area were well-dispersed among a variety of local causes. Five of the eight charitable sectors are represented on Denver's list of top local nonprofits, demonstrating donors' commitment to all aspects of community life—from local animal rescue Dumb Friends League to the award-winning Children's Hospital Colorado.

Consistent giving priorities

Denver may have grown their giving last year, but their grantmaking interests remained consistent. Human services, religion and education remained the top three charitable sectors in 2018, aligning with Fidelity Charitable donors nationwide. These choices reflect what residents here deem most important in the daily lives of their families and their communities.

GIVING SECTOR SPOTLIGHT

Human services

More than half of Giving Accounts in the Denver area sent support to a human services organization in 2018—making it the most popular sector in the area. Human services organizations are well-represented on the list of top local nonprofits, with a particular focus on addressing the needs of the homeless population. Homelessness is a growing problem in Denver—with more than 5,000 people identifying as homeless and the chronically homeless population nearly doubling from 2015 to 2018.¹ Donors are responding to the needs in their community with a strong show of support for organizations providing both emergency services and long-term solutions.
