Highlights in Seattle giving

Growth in giving
Seattle has seen an influx of residents in recent years—lured by its thriving tech sector, stunning natural beauty and vibrant arts scene. And Fidelity Charitable donor activity reflects this rapid growth, with the number of Giving Accounts in the area increasing by 22 percent in 2018, outpacing Fidelity Charitable nationwide (13 percent).

Prominent in the rankings
The Seattle metro area appears on top 10 lists for giving to four of the eight sectors—making its debut on the human services sector list at sixth place. Seattle donors are also highly engaged in giving to international affairs (sixth), arts and culture (seventh) and environment and animals (ninth). The region balances a diverse set of needs and interests that influence its giving.

Diverse local support
Donors in Seattle have shown that they are committed to the local causes they support; nine of the top 10 local grant recipients in 2018 also appeared on the 2017 list, with the top six charities unchanged. Human services organizations are well-represented on the list—charities like Northwest Harvest and Seattle’s Union Gospel Mission—demonstrating Seattle’s commitment to addressing the human needs in their community.

GIVING SECTOR SPOTLIGHT
Arts and culture
Coming in seventh in national rankings for arts and culture support, Seattle is a creative city that revolves around the arts. From the acclaimed Seattle Symphony to the underground clubs of grunge music, art, music and intellectual curiosity run deep in the soul of Seattle—and are reflected in the city’s approach to philanthropy. Three public media organizations appear on the list of popular local nonprofits—with KUOW and Cascade Public Media taking the top two spots. These organizations educate and build cultural awareness, supporting Seattle’s identity as a hub of artistic expression and new ideas.

Most popular arts and culture charities supported by donors from the Seattle area:
- KUOW
- Cascade Public Media
- Pacific Public Media
